

PUBLISHER'S NOTE

A lifetime of experiences battling cystic fibrosis has inspired the incredible wisdom shared in Mary Louise Jarvis' A Mother's Memoir – Living While Dying. Mary Lou's deep commitment to family, along with her strength and compassion, flow purposefully and meaningfully in the face of seemingly insurmountable grief.

Her book is compelling and her outlook is persuasive as she passionately and honestly shares her inconceivable journey, and ultimately that of her children. During a time when little was known about this dreaded disease, Mary Lou struggled in a deep pool of adversity against all odds in an effort to give her children the best life possible. She advocated for those who suffered from symptoms that early on were misdiagnosed.

You will be hard pressed to set her book aside until you've discovered how Mary Lou's faith and hope led her through what most of us would agree to be the darkest days of any mother's world ... the loss of her children. How she tunneled through depression, survived, and rose to start anew is both heart-warming and encouraging.

As her publisher and editor, we are sincerely grateful to Mary Lou for sharing her poignant story, giving us the opportunity to shed light on her brave fight. As Mary Lou relates, she was on foreign soil, and constantly wrestled with trying to find a balance between the all-consuming, relentless treatments and a tinge of normalcy for her family. In the end, what she accomplished was nothing short of miraculous.
